

THE STRIKER'S CASE.

The acquittal of the Carlin strikers by a jury in the U. S. Court after a deliberation of twenty minutes, ends the struggle between the Southern Pacific corporation and the strikers of Nevada.

The verdict caused some extraordinary scenes in the Court room, the spectators exhibiting marked demonstrations of approval by applauding the verdict and crowding about and congratulating the acquitted defendants. This was soon followed by demonstrations outside the Court room, where sympathizers with the defendants manifested their joy by general hilarity and the ringing of bells.

Ever since the big tie up of last Summer there has been a bitter feeling between the public and the company, which was caused principally by the Southern Pacific Company allying itself with the Pullman people in the great struggle between the employees of the company and the Illinois corporation.

In this strike, however, the feeling between the corporations and the public was so bitter that both sides lost sight of the equities in the case.

It was clear that the R. R. Company could have easily avoided participation in the fight by not taking sides with the Pullman Company.

They could have run their passenger cars without the sleepers and also moved their mail cars.

By refusing to do so a great inconvenience was worked on the public which caused the latter to side with the strikers.

The continued refusal of the company to accommodate the public in order to uphold what it was pleased to consider a "principle" cost it millions of dollars and the hatred of the community. On the other hand the company was entitled to legal and if necessary military protection from overt acts on the part of hot headed and thoughtless employees, who went beyond legal limits in the contest. A man has a right to quit work if the terms of employment are obnoxious to him, but he commits an overt act when he prevents others from working in his place.

In the strike, bridges were burned, property destroyed, engines tampered with and men killed.

The men who were engaged in these wanton and violent outrages deserve no sympathy and should be punished for their crimes.

In the case of the Carlin defendants, the testimony was conflicting and there was a suspicion in the minds of the jury that paid detectives were working up evidence to convict on a contingent. Again a good deal of the evidence came from informers, against which there is always a prejudice in this State and the fact that the prosecution did not allow witnesses to go on the stand in the second trial, who had testified in the first, was regarded as a circumstance which weighed in favor of the defendants.

The jury allowed the claim of the defense that the wrong men had been arrested and found accordingly.

Although the United States Government was the prosecutor in the case the jury and the public regarded the Southern Pacific as the main party in the suit, and the verdict was virtually a decision that the R. R. Company could run a mail train without a Pullman. The fact, however, remains undisputed that bridges were burned near Carlin, engines killed and property destroyed and for these criminal acts no one has been punished.

JAPAN'S TERMS.

China, driven to the wall by the invading Japanese, sues for peace. The overtures were made through the United States Minister at Peking. Japan agrees to cease hostilities if China will pay an indemnity of 400,000,000 yen, which is equivalent to so many dollars. Japan also demands the cession of the territory now occupied by its troops. If these terms are not accepted to the indemnity will be increased. No armistice will be granted unless China surrenders.

that the demands of Japan will be granted.

The little nation of 37,000,000 of people has the great Celestial Empire, with its 400,000,000 inhabitants at its feet. The Japanese are united, while the Chinese are divided, and many of the provinces would be pleased to have the present dynasty overthrown, as the Chinese proper would soon have the Japanese have control of the country as the hated Tartar.

The Sacramento Bee has a way of talking in very plain English on social questions. Here is one of its plain paragraphs: A woman of 32 married an octogenarian in San Francisco the other day. The license clerk was recording the necessary items when the woman had him also record an agreement between the man and herself, by which the former agreed to pay her $1000 in consideration of her becoming his wife. In payment for that sum she on her part agreed to perform all the marital functions and be loyal to her spouse.

That woman would probably feel highly insulted if a plain, broken prostitute should set up a claim of superiority on high moral grounds.
